"Budget crisis" again; student clubs angry

by Myles Frosst

All student clubs and organizations "under the auspices" of the Students' Society will operate without knowledge of the extent of funding they can receive from the Society. Decision on all budgets, some earlier thought to have been acceptable by the Society Executive, have been deferred until next week. In addition an emergency meeting of Council Saturday morning, to be attended by representatives of all clubs and societies, will discuss the financial situation in detail.

The decision came after External Vice-President Kyriakos Matziorinis presented a picture of the dismal state of Society finances, based on revenue figures the Executive received from the Administration yesterday afternoon.

The Society is financed by fees paid by students at the time of registration. Any attempt to raise the fees requires a referendum of the student body involving at least 20 percent of all students. Past attempts, such as last year's, have only drawn limited numbers of students.

Citing inflation and the inflexibility of student fees over the last five years, Science representative Philip Inhaber disclosed that, of the $399,000 needed to satisfy various organizations' requests, only $40,000 can be met by Society funds, after making allowance for $275,000 towards maintenance of the Union building and administrative costs. Inhaber went on to outline a proposal by which no budgets would be passed until the Society had received an affirmative response to a referendum on the raising of student fees.

President Andrew Yearwood agreed with Inhaber's analysis of the situation, remarking "we are in a bit of a crisis," and "cannot spend, spend, spend," but must indeed "cut, cut, cut."

The reaction to this measure from the gallery and other councillors was negative and a number of alternatives were suggested following the defeat of the Inhaber motion.

Arts representative Bruce Campbell, suggested the closure of the Union except for necessary services as a way of emphasizing to students the dire state of Society finances.

Another suggestion, from Medicine representative Robert Perlman, called for increased student contributions, through the Administration, upping Student Services fees and transferring this money to the Society. This course of action would not require consent of the student body.

He also suggested that all students actively involved in clubs be charged a membership fee. This measure, Matziorinis emphasized, would not so much defray costs as aid in determining each organization's degree of benefit to the student community.

That many more students derive benefit from clubs such as the Film Society than are actual members of the organization seemed to be of little interest to the Executive.

Regardless of what measures may be taken it is obvious, if the Executive's financial analysis is valid, that drastic cuts must be made in all budgets, including

U de M sociology students boycott courses

by Charlie Clark

Sociology students at Université de Montréal are boycotting classes and since last Monday have been conducting their own seminars and research projects.

The students, numbering about 70 in a department of 200, are proceeding with the implementation of an alternative curriculum, in spite of its rejection by the Department of Sociology last spring.

The alternative curriculum, as proposed to the department, involves replacing the standard lecture class group research projects that involve "a more active role for students, a collectivist approach to learning and far more contact with the struggles and contradictions of the outside world."

At a special study session held by U. de M. sociology students last March, it was voted to provide two weeks without classes at the beginning of each semester in order to conduct evaluation of the sociology curriculum at the university.

The evaluation, conducted these past few weeks, set out to gain information and perspective on "the teaching level of the sociology department and its level of practical engagement in politics and in sociological spheres," according to a statement by the group.

"The current pluralistic structure of the department implies a certain neutrality which maintains an air of respectability for the university. But this only reflects the lack of any conservative ideology while giving a false sense of security and democracy." The statement called for the department to establish a political line so that students can situate themselves towards the curriculum.

In concrete terms, the students proposed research themes along the lines of the working class movements, community organizations, youth groups and family relations. The program includes guest debaters from opposing camps in current issues such as strikes or the government's economic policies.

After rejecting the curriculum, the sociology professors presented a counter-proposal which provided for a more coherent concentration within the existing structure of the sociology department by way of combining certain courses. This was rejected by the students because "it ignored the root questions raised by the new program in favour of technical and administrative juggling."

"It actually gave us less freedom while retaining the individualist approach," said a spokesman. The students saw no reason to attempt a "counter-counter proposal" and have proceeded with their own program as planned, effectively cancelling the normal courses.

The remaining 130 students in the department, are mostly first year students who, according to the spokesman, are the only ones attending classes because they haven't familiarized themselves with the department.

The spokesman also added that if and when the department threatens to annul all credit for the semester, all students in the department have agreed to stage a general strike.

The Sociology department could not be reached for comment.

Throwing some light on Aladin Project

To the Daily:

I would like to correct some errors that appeared in your article "St. Louis Residents Plan Action Against Highrise."

1) The name of the Portuguese organizer is not Morges, it is Borges.

2) The open meeting was not "strictly to consider the consequences of the Aladin Development Project." That was only the first item on the agenda. Unfortunately, because of the disruption that ensued, the meeting was terminated before any further discussion on other topics.

3) The district of St. Louis has various ethnic groups including Portuguese, Greeks, Spanish, West Indians, French, Chinese, and a minority of English. However, since the Aladin Project is located in the midst of the Portuguese community in St. Louis, the majority of citizens at the meeting were of Portuguese origin.

4) There was a general feeling from the article that the main crux of this organizing effort is to "stop the Aladin Project." In fact, of the six requests presented to City Hall on September 11, (Daily, Sept. 17) only the first one had a direct reference to this development. The rest were demands to the City of Montreal to set up policies and controls in conjunction with citizens' representatives in St. Louis.

I hope you will not feel responsible for the above errors. Even Daily reporters cannot be expected to understand Portuguese. Thank you for attending the meeting.

GAY MCGILL TO RE-ORGANIZE

On Wednesday evening, September 24, a group of at least 30 McGill students, staff, and affiliated members of the university community, attended a meeting in order to re-organize Gay McGill. An interim executive committee consisting of James Boast, Robert Vallee, and Sheridan Reavely was selected to facilitate the organization of this group.

It is hoped that Gay McGill will establish a more solid base among McGill students than was the case previously. Immediate plans for the group consist of having weekly informal social meetings in order to encourage interaction between members and to foster a sense of group spirit.

Long-range plans for the organization include: a) pressing for the re-instatement of the McGill Gay Dances b) the possibility of holding various cultural activities such as concerts c) serving as a vehicle for the organization of out-reach community projects such as a V.D. program d) serving as an educational resource by providing people to disseminate information about, and to participate in discussions concerning, homosexuality.

It was decided that a Social Evening will be held the evening of October 4th. (Interested persons should keep informed of upcoming meetings and events by referring to the Daily). All persons interested in participating in Gay McGill are urged to share in the re-organization of this group.

All budgets, therefore, even those given provisional approval over the summer, must be reviewed, revised, and slashed.

Mainly slashed, says the Executive.

All new budgets must be submitted to the Internal vice-president by noon Wednesday. Societies are urged to send representatives to tomorrow's emergency meeting for further clarification (and/or obfuscation) of the present financial situation.

Tonight at Molson

Big time soccer returns to McGill

by Sherwin Wong

Redmen soccer returns to McGill tonight after an absence spanning five years. The Redmen will play their first game in half a decade tonight at eight o'clock, up at Molson Stadium against College Militaire Royale.

Young 'uns

The entire squad is virtually made up of new people who have never played together as a team until this year. This poses problems for coach Trevor Stevens. For one thing, the players are not familiar with each other's playing abilities and, as a result, play more as individuals than a coordinated unit.

Nevertheless, Stevens expressed optimism about his team's chances in the upcoming season. After watching his players in action against teams from Dawson and St. Bruno, he observed a marked improvement in the squad's play. "There is a positive attitude on the team," said Stevens, "and the players are starting to play together as a unit."

Gonna sweat

Stevens added that in order to win, he would have to rely on the determination and hustle of his players. He mentioned the name of Jan Turek as such an example. Others players to look for are the two captains, Frank Grusveld and Saul Schuster. Both have impressed Stevens with their play so far. The goal-tending situation seems stable according to Stevens. Mario Galeano and Gordie Campbell have the honor of tending the nets.

Stevens is aware that his team does have weaknesses. First and foremost on his mind is his concern over the small size of the team. He stated that normally, size does not play a major role in soccer but he made it quite clear that if there was a struggle for a ball that was in the air, his players would be at a disadvantage. In order to compensate for his team's small size, he'll order his players to "keep the ball low to the ground."

Big match

After the contest with C.M.R., the varsity squad will travel to Concordia on Sunday afternoon, September 28 at two o'clock to play the Concordia Concordians.

This will be the big test for McGill as Concordia won the Quebec University Athletic Association championship last year and they were runners-up in the national finals. Asked his feelings on his team's chances for a victory, Stevens answered, "We're going to give it our best shot and we'll certainly give Concordia a run for their money."

DAILY SPORTS

The McGill Redmen arm themselves for their upcoming confrontation with York. The team leaves this afternoon for Toronto. Let's hope they won't have to use their big guns!
